

*FRIENDSHIP FARM
Kennedyville, Maryland

Constructed in great numbers on the Eastern Shore during the last quarter of the 19th century, "central gable" houses like this building are typified by bracketed or gingerbread cornices, decorative attic windows, and wide front porches. Almost always there is a central entrance and main stair as well as a rear ell. The unusually wide central gable of Friendship Farm House increases its scale and presence.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Friendship Farm House is a frame structure of the late 19th Century. It is a five bay, central-gable type house with a central entry leading to the main stair hall. The central gable of this building is wider than that of most buildings of this type; in this case it covers over three bays.

The gable roof of the main house is covered with tin roofing and finished with bracketted eaves; there is a cyma recta molding at the roof's edge and a turned finial atop the central gable. Brick chimneys with simple corbelled caps are located in each gable.

Windows throughout the house have two over two sash with a wide central muntin and unmolded trim; sills are also plain and project slightly from the surface of the wall. Louvered shutters, painted black, are in place at most second floor windows. On the first floor, shutters have two panels with a WP-163 type panel moldings. Original hardware--hinges, sliding bolts, and shell-pattern shutter dogs--remain in place.

A pointed window is used in the central gable; there are four-pane windows in the side gables of the main house.

The main entrance of Friendship Farm house has a five-pane overlight and three-pane side-light, both glazed with red and blue glass. The door has four panels, the upper two being round-headed; door and side-light panels have bolection moldings.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Friendship Farm House exemplifies a common type of farmhouse of the period from ca 1875 to ca 1890. Its most significant architectural feature, the central gable of its main facade, is modified to extend over the central three bays instead of the more usual one-and-one-half bays. This modification gives the building an increased scale and presence which is unusual in a house of this size and age. In other ways detailing, floor plan, size, the building is a typical, fairly well preserved example of its type.

The 1877 Atlas of Kent County shows that this building was not yet constructed. Two very similiar houses at Cloverleaf Farm (K-375) and Partnership Farm (K-383) nearby were standing by 1877 and this building was probably constructed soon thereafter.

The house has a two-story, gable roofed rear wing, extended by a shed roof rear addition. Windows in the wing have six over six sash. There is a simple side porch. Besides the additions previously mentioned, alterations in the building include modification of the floor plan of the wing and the covering of the wooden siding with grey asbestous siding.

The central hall main house has two rooms per floor. The stair is of the dog-leg type with an octagonal walnut newel and handrail and turned oak balusters. Ogee type moldings are used to finish the seven-inch baseboards, as the panel moldings of the four-panel doors, and as a part of the window and door trim as shown.

Painted oak graining remains on the baseboards, door, and the stair risers. In the western bedroom a printed cabbage-rose wall paper cornice is used above red-painted walls. Although this is not the original wall treatment, it appears to be an early one.

There are no fireplaces in the house, although mantle shelves were hung on the chimney breasts where stoves were installed.
